

Your general practitioner collaborates with Amsterdam UMC on scientific research and improving healthcare

What is the Academic Network of General Practice Amsterdam UMC (ANHA)?

The ANHA is a collaboration between the Department of General Practice at Amsterdam UMC and general practitioners in the Amsterdam region in the areas of research, healthcare improvement, and medical education.

Scientific research is essential for further improving healthcare and expanding knowledge.

Working together for better healthcare

Your general practitioner participates in ANHA. Your general practice provides data to the Academic Network of General Practice Amsterdam UMC for this purpose. These data are included in the ANHA database and consist of information concerning the care provided to patients.

For example, diagnoses, medication use, laboratory results, and treatment are included in this database. These data are used for scientific research. With these data, ANHA also provides your general practitioner with information about the care provided compared to other general practitioners.

This way, ANHA and your general practitioner contribute to improving healthcare.

If you object to the use of your data, please inform your general practitioner. Your data will then no longer be shared with ANHA.

If you have questions about the protection of your privacy, please contact the ANHA team via huisartsennetwerk@amsterdamumc.nl.
